Course Description

In this class we will conduct an in-depth study of the morphology of English. This class will be aimed at students with some previous knowledge of morphology. We will examine in detail the internal structure of English words, their history and the elements that build them. This seminar-style course will consist of the discussion of articles led by class members.

Course Textbook

There will be no textbook for this course, since there is no book that adequately covers the topic at the appropriate level. We will read various articles on topics related to English morphology, taken from relevant sources.

Course Website

There is a website for this course, which will contain the readings that we will be examining, as well as other information concerning the class, located at <http://stonham.dyndns.org/morph2/>

Assessment

This class will be conducted in seminar fashion with one person leading discussion of a paper and the others contributing their views on it. Assessment will be based on attendance and participation, as well as leading the discussion of two journal articles and writing a summary of each paper (1000 words for each summary).

Class attendance and participation: 10%

Leading discussion of three papers: 15% each = 45%

Submission of three summaries: 15% each = 45%
